Winter's winds on the face and hands produce the same results as an ax on the bark of a tree. Cuticle is your bark; uncared for, this windy, cold weather will roughen and chap it. As it would be uncomfortable to guard face and hands by a substantial inclosure, use Glycerose Lotion, which is better than a sheltering fence. It will soften and heal the chapped skin, remove redness and roughness—it is not sticky or greasy. More—it fights the wind and cold weather—it is the best armor against the breath of frost—by its cool, represhing touch it prevents and heals sore, cracked skin, and heals all parts exposed to the chilling blasts of outdoors.

MEDICAL MEN STUDY ALTITUDE.

Observe Conditions of the Blood at Various Elevations.

SPECIAL BY CABLE.
Paris, Nov. 30.—Pour balloon loads of Paristan scientists have acquired a fund of medical lore gathered at high altitudes from observations on themselves and a collection of animals, including a big St. Bernard.

The chief point investigated was the influence of altitude on the blood.

When on the ground a cubic millimeter contains 6,000,000 red corpuscies. At 4,000 meters the number seemed to increase to 10,000,000. A careful test showed this increase to be only apparent.
